Their very names suggest their heritage: Cherokee, Chippewa, White Mountain, Black Hills, Roosevelt, Daniel Boone, Sierra and Sequoia. They're our National Forests. Thanks to generations past, now they're ours to enjoy. To renew body and spirit, to inspire a passion for the land, to let us reconnect with nature, and with each other. But within our forests, there has been devastation by insects, disease, and fire. Now it's our turn.

The Arbor Day Foundation asks for your help in replanting our National Forests, because their majesty is our inheritance. Their conservation will be our legacy. See how, together, we can plant our future.

50th Anniversary of Earth Day launches with challenges and ideas

S.A.V.E - Speak up, Act, Vote, Educate

Use Smart Phone App to Take Action and Contribute to New Citizen Science Cloud

Earth Day Network has launched 22 days of Earth Day with daily challenges that individuals can take every day to fight climate change in the face of the coronavirus pandemic. Each day highlights an individual action people can take, no matter where they are.

Recognizing the ever-changing ability of individuals to move and act outside in light of the novel coronavirus outbreak worldwide, all actions in the global challenge can be either taken online or from the safety of one's home.

"While we collectively take action as individuals to bend the curve and reduce the spread of coronavirus, we cannot lose sight of the bigger picture — our global climate crisis. The intrinsic connections between human health and planetary health sparked the first Earth Day in 1970, and today, we must rise to meet these dual crises again as Earth Day marks 50 years," said Kathleen Rogers, president of Earth Day Network.

"In the face of a challenge that forces us to stay apart, we offer challenges to bring the world together. This 22-day series will allow people to connect through challenges to take action right now, and every day, for our planet. Because no matter where you are in the world, we are connected by a fierce and urgent determination to overcome our shared emergencies, be it coronavirus or climate change," said Rogers.

2020 will be a monumental time for the environmental movement. The year will see 65 major elections worldwide and countless mass mobilizations in defense of the planet.

"The year 2020 kicks off a decade of change, and April will kick off a month of bold actions for the planet. The Earth needs us now more than ever," said Rogers.

Individuals Around the Globe Use Smart Phone App to Take Action and Contribute to New Citizen Science Cloud

This project creates a global expansion of open source citizen science data and opportunities for civic engagement.

Earth Challenge has two goals. First, to aggregate existing citizen science from around the world and make it interoperable, creating a coordinated point of entry for the research and public policy community. Second, to give each user of the Earth Challenge 2020 app the opportunity to take a civic action specifically related to issues in their own country. The app is available in 11 languages. For Earth Day, we will focus on two research areas: air quality and plastic pollution. Over the coming months, issue areas will be added on insects, water quality, food security and local climate impacts.

The coronavirus pandemic reinforces the importance of science in understanding and protecting our health and environment. The app enables individuals to participate in authentic environmental research from the safety of their homes, while being part of the global citizen science community.

The Earth Challenge Initiative will:

- Fill existing data gaps to help scientists, policymakers, and society understand and ultimately counter damaging environmental trends;
- Engage and educate millions of people on the crucial role of science, show how their participation is contributing to a larger data set, and provide up-to-date civic engagement actions.
- The app also includes country-specific "what you can do" actions to help citizen scientists to take action that address problems like local air or plastic pollution.

Led by principle partners Earth Day Network, the Wilson Center and the U.S. Department of State's Eco-Capitals Forum, Earth Challenge has been in development for over three years and has attracted a broad alliance of organizations and institutions globally.

Kathleen Rogers, President of Earth Day Network, the organization that coordinates Earth Day said, "Now, people everywhere can help build the most up-to-date scientific assessments needed globally, and at the same time take action locally. Everyone can become a citizen scientist and during the pandemic do so from the safety of their homes."

The EC2020 App can be downloaded on the Apple's App Store and Google Play.

On April 22 as Earth Day goes digital, the world will seize all the tools and actions that we have, big and small, to change our lives and change our world — not for one day, but forever.

CUTTING THE CORD

By Amanda Nelson

Welcome Disney+ to the Streaming Wars

The newest player in the streaming war is a big one – welcome Disney+ (pronounced “Disney Plus”) to the frontlines! The subscription service was launched last November and focuses on family-friendly content. Disney is an entertainment machine because it took strategic steps to give this brand a new life. Gone are the days of the company where they manipulate demand with the infamous Disney Vault, where movies are made available for home purchase for a period of time then will not be produced until the film is “re-released” years later. In the modern world where we are driven by instant gratification, that business model is not going to work. Just like how you can’t depend on one person’s talent to carry a team, Disney was not going to revive its brand in the new millennium off of the success of Frozen alone. Well by finding a way to generate monthly revenue the company is on its way back to relevancy.

Up until 2019, it was common to come across some medium-profile Disney movies (more like Lilo & Stitch level, not vault) on Netflix but their contract finally lapsed last year. If you’re not aware, Disney has been acquiring lots of companies for the last decade including Lucasfilms, Marvel, and most recently 21st Century Fox studios. As Disney’s contract was coming to an end with Netflix they had all existing Marvel Netflix Original series cancelled on the platform. That was six series, most with several seasons under their belt. Netflix is their biggest competitor since Disney also owns Hulu which is another popular streaming platform.

One disadvantage is that it is going to take time building up the Disney+ originals, ones made specifically for the streaming platform like The Mandalorian. With most subscription services, they want to provide unique content that cannot be found on cable or TV to entice you, legitimizing your monthly payment in addition to your existing cable or other entertainment services. Although they offer loads of The Disney Channel original shows and movies, if you bought it solely for the first ever live-action Star Wars show you’re going to have to wait a year for the next season. Ultimately, it is common that cord cutters will buy a streaming service for a season of a specific show and then cancel it for ten months until the show returns with new episodes. Knowing this was a big part of a subscription service, Disney+ came out swinging with ten original movies and seven series. If you subscribed thinking it mainly targeted kids, you might be surprised. The Mandalorian may have been the bait, but now we’re all hooked.

Sure, there are no rated R movies or television content of TV-MA, standards that imply the material is not suited for people under 18. Still, the franchise movies from Star Wars and The Marvel Cinematic Universe alone offer volumes of beloved Hollywood blockbusters. Apparently, Disney also makes tons of live action movies, and not just all the recent remakes from the vault classics. Hit movie franchises like Pirates of the Caribbean, National Treasure, and Tron, plus feel-good sports movies like Remember the Titans, Miracles, and Cool Runnings are all Disney films available to stream. They even offer shows from National Geographic such as Wicked Tuna and The Incredible Dr. Pol. When you consider the cost is either $7 monthly or $70 for a whole year, you might want to just go for the annual subscription to get your savings as you’ll likely find more to watch than you expected.

The Simpsons – Fox, Season 31 on Sunday’s; Seasons 1-30 on Disney+

Long live The Simpsons! Such a groundbreaking show, you’d think it’d get tired after 30 seasons.

Part of its success is that makes it so great is being a cartoon the character’s never age and the writers can tell infinite stories without having to consider continuity. These days, the only reason why a character is retired is when the actual voice actor passes away. But that doesn’t mean the characters haven’t changed over time.

When was the last time you’ve heard Bart say cowabunga dude? Other animated shows tend to lean on running gags but Simpsons balances a good amount of change with the times.

Yes, they’ve been criticized for the portrayal of some of their minority characters such as Apu. Since it was created in 1989, they’re not really sorry for it because society was wholly different for two thirds of the shows run. Instead, to address this they utilize the character troupes that had been defined in the beginning such as Lisa being the smart feminist. It makes sense to make her the character to bring up topics reserved for advances in social justice. They execute the change in sentiment well because even the episodes that aired in February contained several jokes that made the little voice in your head say “wow, they still said that in today’s day and age!”

The Simpsons is an example of true compromise, adjusting to modern times while remaining loyal to the original concept.

Star Wars: The Clone Wars – Disney+, Season 7 starts Feb 21, 2020

This animated series is finally getting the conclusion it deserves after being prematurely cut from its original airing network, Cartoon Network, due to the acquisition of Lucasfilms by Disney+ in 2013.

Fans have waited over six years for it to get out from under contract dealings. Now as a Disney+ exclusive, the final season has been made available.

Follow Yoda, Mace Windu, and Anakin Skywalker as they defend the Republic. The entire series takes place between the films Episode II Attack of the Clones and Episode III Revenge of the Sith, it was initially set up so story arcs could be stand alone episodes but also add to the dynamic of character relationships.

With over 120 episodes available to stream, you don’t have to have watched all of the show to enjoy the cannon of Star Wars that so many of us hold dear. Plus, we already know how it all ends right?

Brain Games – National Geographic, Season 8 on Monday’s; Seasons 1-7 on Disney+

After four years Brain Games is back with a new season and this time, with a new host. Sorry Jason Silva you were great but we are so excited to see a fresh talent of the times, Keegan-Michael Key running the new format! Each week he is joined by a celebrity or two who together learn about a topic appropriate to the guest like power couple Kristen Bell and Dax Shepard squaring off male vs female brains and NFL’s Drew Brees on performance. With so many seasons already covering a multitude of topics, this time there is a lighter approach to keep it fun. One thing that doesn’t change, is what you are able to take away about how the brain learns and how you can incorporate that into bettering your own life.

V STREAMING TIPS

By Westside Steve Simmons

It was 1938. Orson Welles: "With my radio broadcast WAR OF THE WORLDS I threw the entire United States of America into an uncontrolled panic." in 2020 world media networks said: "Hold my beer." Of course I'm paraphrasing an old joke but regardless of anyone's level of fear we are all in this together. People are being hurt all over the state of Ohio by the government crackdown and none more than the movie theaters. Since we can't go out I'm going to give you a handful of binge-worthy cable series to help kill the time. Some of these are household names while some just might be flying under your radar. These are in no particular order but I will start with one of my favorites.

Nearly 25 years ago George RR Martin began writing Epic Fantasy called GAME OF THRONES. The books are huge with hundreds of characters and hundreds of plot twists so I was a little worried if HBO would be able to convert these into a cohesive series and oh, but they did. With the help of state-of-the-art graphics, compelling story lines, strong characters, and top-notch acting the series doesn't slow down and there are no dead spots.

The novel BOARD-WALK EMPIRE, the birth of which came from High Times and Corruption of Atlantic City by Nelson. The series portrays the life and times of Nicky Thompson (Steve Buscemi) from street punk to the crime Lord in the Golden Age of Atlantic City, New Jersey and its casinos and the mob. There are five seasons on HBO.

SONS OF ANARCHY Charlie Hunnam, Katey Sagal and Ron Perlman star as motorcycle gang royalty in this FX series of the bike gang and it's mysterious beginnings and family intrigue.

The story takes plenty of twists and turns through its 7 seasons raging from humor to action to Intrigue to Shakespearean allegory.

SNEAKY PETE

played by Giovanni Ribisi, is a con man. During a prison stretch a cell mate describes a life on the farm with an extended family he had been estranged from for many years. Upon leaving prison Pete decides to go to the farm house and pretend to be their long-lost grandchild and finds out that the apparently idyllic family has a dark side. There are three seasons so far and you can watch them on Amazon Prime.

BLOODLINE from Netflix is an engrossing Tale of a Florida family Kyle Chandler, Sissy Spacek and Norbert Leo Butz are three of the main characters. Each family member has a story and every one of these stories revolves around the death of the youngest child. It's a great series with a less than great final season as the chiselers at Netflix horse the writers to wrap it up too quickly. But it's still a great watch.

HBO's WEST-WORLD is a brilliant adaptation of the old Yul Brynner science fiction Western of the same name about an amusement park that creates Androids with which the human guests can interact until everything goes horribly wrong. The first season is a great deal of fun though the second one begins to get dark and opaque and frankly hard to watch. Some people will love it, some will be tempted to bail during season 2, but season 3 starts to right the ship.

This really isn't an exact series but my favorite mystery novelist Harlan Coben has been signed on for British Production Company and has made 3 Series so far, THE FIVE, SAFE and now THE STRANGER, the last of which is actually an adaptation of one of his novels. Reminder each of these series is complicated so pay attention. And remember the heavy English accents sometimes make the dialogue a bit tricky to understand so captions are helpful but thanks to the DVR you can always back up and listen again.

LINE OF DUTY

This is another series from Great Britain, actually Belfast Northern Ireland. Martin Compston and Vicky McClure are two of the main stars but there are many in this police procedural show. There are at least five seasons which is good because the seasons aren't that long and it can be a pain in the ass waiting an entire year for the next chapter. Every season will deal with a different crime but they are all interlaced somehow.

I have to imagine anyone who has DVR and a premium cable network has seen or at least heard of BREAKING BAD. Bryan Cranston, a high school chemistry teacher who has fallen on hard times and Aaron Paul, his scruffy drug-dealing student rise to the top of the crystal meth empire in the Southwest. To be honest when I read that description it wasn't something I wanted to see but trust me gang, after three episodes you will be hooked!

A spin-off of Breaking Bad, BETTER CALL SAUL, tells the tale of a crooked but charismatic ambulance chaser Saul Goodman and how he rose to prominence. Bob Odenkirk, Jonathan Banks, Rhea Seehorn, and Michael McKean star in this quirky prequel, also on Netflix.

Yes it's a golden oldie and it took me years to start on it because like Breaking Bad I wasn't hooked by the description, a serial killer who kills other serial killers. But the writing is good the stories are intriguing and Michael C. Hall starring as the title character DEXTER is charismatic enough to make it a series that it's hard to stop watching. There are eight seasons from Showtime with a weird glitch after season 6 but it's not a deal-breaker. And there are rumors of a revival.

Speaking of charismatic Psychopaths there's a new show called YOU. This is another case of a charismatic star making an otherwise unpleasant character seem like a ball. Penn Badgley Stars has Joe a hopeless romantic who has a tendency to fall too deeply in love too often and is not afraid of a little well-meaning stocking kidnapping and murder. Take my word for it it's a lot more entertaining than it sounds. There are two seasons on Netflix.

I'll leave you with one more idea from Amazon Prime video. When I was a kid one of my favorite television shows was THE REAL MCCOYS starring Walter Brennan, Richard Crenna, and Kathy Nolan. Like LEAVE IT TO BEAVER and THE ANDY GRIFFITH SHOW this is one of the old time series that still holds up. I watch an episode every evening before I go to bed and I'm never disappointed. One thing that just recently struck me is that those of us from northeast Ohio are completely aware of what a West Virginia accent sounds like, so take note that Oscar winning Grandpa Amos McCoy has a rural New England accent throughout the show and we just never noticed.

Good luck folks hope everybody stays healthy and I will see you back in the movies when the Panic is forgotten. Sooner rather than later I hope.

And keep your eyes open for Westside Steve Simmons' fourth solo CD entitled "Great Wishes and Small" which will be released in May!
